A NEW BOOK BY C. G. D. ROBERTS. POET LAUREATE OF CANADA.

"Lucifer," the Great Dutch Drama by Justus van der Vondel-Spain in History-Other Late Products of the Bookmakers.

A man who might be called a sovereign poet, in addition to his being a master of prose as shown in several volumes of history and fiction, and who is, above all, never vindictive and never charged with literary jealousies, is rarely found in modern

Charles G. D. Roberts, the Canadian poet and acknowledged laureate of that vigorous young nation, has recently collected and published an exquisite little volume of poems, mostly lyrical, under the title "New York Nocturnes and Other Poems."

As the title suggests, the book has to deal mostly with the everyday sights and themes and emotions to be found among the people of a great city and is, no doubt, the outcome of the author's residence in New York during his year just passed as a self-appointed exile from his native country. Most of the poems in this collection have appeared in the leading magazines and periodicals, but many of them are new. The undersong of the book is condensed with beautiful expression, in these two verses appearing in the dedication entitled

"The Ideal:"

The city's clamor died in calm;
And once again I heard
The moon-white woodland stillnesses
Enchanted by a bird:

A breath from childhood daisy fields
Came back to me again,
Here in the city's weary miles
Of city-wearied men.
A persuasive tenderness and alriness of touch distinguishes the volume from most of Mr. Roberts' verse, but after a long acquaintance with his carlier work it might seem that the very nature of such a title seem that the very nature of such a title has occasioned certain limitations of treathas occasioned certain limitations of treat-ment. Mr. Roberts is too much at home in the vast infinitude to submit easily to circumscriptions. There is not here the broad scope and sweeping vision to be found in these opening lines of "The Wrestler," a symbolical poem of much power, that appeared some time ago:

When God sends out His company to travel through There is every kind of wonder in the show; The master showman, Time, has a strange trick of rhyme,

And the clown's most ribald jest is a tear:
But the best drawing card is the Wrestler, huge an Who can fill the tent at any time of year:but there is a spirit of calm restfulness and lyrical spontaneity in this little vol-ume which is refreshing and delightful. (Boston: Lamson, Wolffe & Co.)

Milton and Vondel.

A book of more than ordinary interest has been brought out by the Continental Publishing Company, in the Dutch tragedy of "Lucifer," translated by L. C. Van Noppen from the original of Justus Van den Vondel. The well known fact that Milton borrowed without compunction from the Dutch masterpiece and was also more or less indebted to Vondel for his conception of "Paradise Lost" and also "Paradise Regained," combine to render this work interesting aside from its being the magnus opus of the most brilliant period of Dutch literature. It is a matter of surprise that down to the present time there has been no English translation of the "Lucifer," although, after all, its neglect is but a part of the general indifference among us to the literature of Holland in all periods of its history.

literature of Holland in all periods of its history.

Beauty can never remain hidden long, whether in nature or art. An era of translation always arrives sooner or later, and it is a matter of significance that the herald of this fine tragedy has even now appeared. Vondel completed his masterpiece in the ripenees and maturity of his powers, at the age of 66, when the republic of the United Netherlands was enjoying its greatest period of prosperity. The long wars with France and Spain were over and it was a propitious time for artistic achievement. The warrior and hero never passes but what the singer can been seen approaching on the opposite horizon. Vondei appeared. Fullness of life, growth of power, and the extension of the boundaries were everywhere apparent. The life of the period was like an impressive pageant; in front, proud cavaliers in high saddles, on their prancing steeds, with saddles, on their prancing steeds, with splendid colors and martial weapons, while slik banners gorgeously embroidered are waving aloft, and in the midst of this silk banners gorgeously embroidered are waving aloft, and in the midst of this busy, murmurous scene arose the great swansong of Holland.

The play opens as softly as the opening strains of some grand oratorio. The first act is largely descriptive, a picture of the beautiful serenity of Heaven and of the joys of Paradise. Bringing Apollion and Beelzebub together reveals, in a masterly manner, the two controlling motives of the play—the envy of man's power and the jealousy of human happiness. The dialogue between these two celestial rogues shows great dramatic skill, and abounds in subtleties worthy of Lucifer himself. During the succeeding acts rebellion is hatched in Heaven, where everything is a blaze of uproar. Uproar is the smoke of noise. Rebellion becomes a conflagration in the famous battle scene, as portrayed also by Milton.

Milton.

Action is in every line, and every word is a battle stroke when Lucifer and his myriad hosts are driven out of Heaven. The plays ends with a choral threnody of all the angels. The storm of war has ceased, and above the thunder-mantled sky hovers the rainbow of peace.

and above the thunder-mantled sky hovers the rainbow of peace.

Mr. Van Noppen has laid the student of Milton, and also of Dutch literature, under heavy obligations by the translation of this drama, and might add to our indebtedness by giving us an English version of Vondel's later plays, the tragedy of "Samson," which seems to have suggested to Milton the "Samson Agonistes." The edition is limited to 1,250 copies and is dedicated to the Holland Society of New York, with illustrations by John Aarts, the eminent Dutch artist.

Apropos of the recent war with Spain, Mr.

Apropos of the recent war with Spain, Mr. James A. Harrison has revised and enlarged his "Spain in History." bringing it down to a time just preceding the capture and destruction of Admiral Cervera's fleet near Santiago de Cuba. Had he, walted a few weeks, or even a few days, he might have told of the captululation of Santiago and the final cersustion of hostilities. As it is this is one of the first purely historical accounts of the war narrating all the important events previous to the signing of the protocol and final articles of peace.

At this moment the chapters referring to the nation as it is to-day are more interesting to American readers than those that refer to lits rise and medieval period of prosperity. The effects of avarictousness in a people have never been so appalling nor led to such destructive results as have overtaken this nation that dominated the whole of Europe and America in the time of Shakespeare. While censuring and redressing the wrongs done by the Spaniards in Cuba and elsewhere, most Americans will still remember that this is the land that Washington Irving and Prescott first made attractive to them, in the domain both of history and romance. Mr. Harrison's narrative has long had a deservedly high rank as a just and discriminating history of this enfeebled power. It is, moreover, the work of a recognized scholar and profound student of history and contains much valuable information of modern Spain of which so little is really known.

Theophile Gautler declared some years ago, and it is quite as true of the present that "a journey in Spain is a romantic and perilous affair. You will have to risk your life, and will need courage, patience and strength, Peril encircles you, follows you, goes before you; is all around you. The author speaks in very complimentary terms of the eueen regent. She has made herself even popular with the masses, and, in a great measure, lived down the objection to her as a foreigner, and it is this popularity that may save her and her house in the proposacin

"Ocean to Ocean on Horseback." By Willard Glazier. Captam Glazier was a soldier in the war of the rebellion and has written several war stories, some of which have had a wide circulation. The present volume is a narration of what the author saw and learned on an overland trip across the American continent twenty years ago. In a journey of that sort one was not likely at that time, any more than now, to meet with exciting adventures or make any specially thrilling discoveries. Captain Glazier's experiences were accordingly of an uneventful character, but he has related them in a way to make his book interesting to the average peader, weaving in a degree of historical "Ocean to Ocean on Horseback." The author's style is fully equal to the requirements of the volume he has produced. The book is attractively bound and contains many illustrations. (Phila-delphia: Hubbard Publishing Company.)

The Faith of the Friends.

"An Interpretation of the Gospel Ac-cording to Friends," by Stella Frances Jenkins. (Published by the author, Kan-Jenkins. (Published by the author, Kansas City, Mo.) In this pamphlet of eighty-two pages Miss Jenkins seeks to give in concise form an explanation of the character and faith of the religious sect with which she is identified as an earnest worker and public instructor. Her style is simple, and clear and her ideas are logically presented. The work is intended chiefly for the instruction of new members and of the young, and it ought to prove very helpful to these classes. Those unacquainted with the peculiarities and oractices of the Friends will find in this little treatise some interesting information. The work has met with the approval of some of the leading Friends of America.

"TOM" GAY RETURNS.

He Was the Head Waiter of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, Who Went to Europe With Dave Moffat.

New York Special to the Chicago Tribune. David H. Moffat, silver king of Colorado, and Thomas Gay, head waiter of the Fifth Avenue hotel, walked down the gangway of the Lucania this morning when the big Cunarder tied up at its pier at the foot of larkson street.
"Dave" Moffat—as he is familiarly known

"Dave" Moffat—as he is familiarly known among his millionaire mining friends—is worth about $40,000,600. "Tom" Gay owns what he carries about with him, which today includes his memory of a glorious jaunt through European capitals as the guest of the rich Westerner.

The two men, multi-millionaire and waiter, salled on the Campania for Europe early in the summer. Mr. Moffat, although a silver Democrat, has always stopped at the Fifth Avenue hotel, and the siender man who ruled the waiters in the dining room was a favorite of the silver king.

It remained for "Dave" Moffat to reach the acme of his popularity when he announced he would take "Tom" Gay with him on his European trip—not as a valet or waiter, but as companion on the voyage. And so "Tom" Gay returned to New York as he had gone from it—in the choicest stateroom on the crack ship of the Cunard fleet.

According to Mr. Moffat's own statement he has had no cause to regret his taking a head walter as a companion on a trip such as many men wish for out few of them get On the way over from here on the Cam-pania Gay acquitted himself so well that he became a favorite with the first cabin passengers, none of whom knew of his real identity until the ship touched at Queens-identity until the ship touched at Queenstown.

In the two months that they have been abroad Moffat and his protege have visited London and the Scottish lakes, Paris, Switzerland and the Continent in general. Aside from the trip, "Tom" Gay's loss in salary for the time he has been absent from the Fifth Avenue hotel will be paid by Mr. Moffat.

Gay will resume his duties as head waiter at the Fifth Avenue at once, probably leading his former host to a seat in the dining room at breakfast to-morrow morning.

ever had occasion to transact business, followed her husband to the grave not very many days ago.

It is told of Worth that he was particularly appreciative of her because she evinced no senseless feelings of jealousy, which might naturally spring up in the heart of another woman whose husband was a dressmaker and came into such close association with women as was necessary in the business.

According to Lew Rosen, the London correspondent of the Washington Post, Worth said to a friend shortly before his death: "I do not suppose that there is a man living who has come into more immediate contact with a large number of lovely women than myself. What, in the name of all that is good, could I have done had Mme Worth had a jealous bee in her bonnet? I should have been obliged to shut up shop, for, after all, in spite of every regard for les concenances, I was now and then obliged to place my hands on a woman's shoulders, to touch her waist, and so forth. Fancy my having had to give a full and detailed account of all this to my wife! But heaven be praised, Mme. Worth, though she had many a fine bonnet, she never had a jealous bee in it."

New York Tribune: The first week of September is the time to prepare the house plants. All plants designed for window culture must receive treatment now. The young slips should be put in pots in a shady place and sprinkled each night, after the sun has set. Before plants are ready to remove to the house they should have a steady, healthy growth; buds must be plucked off as soon as they appear, and the dead leaves carefully clipped, while every caution should be observed in the protection of the follage from insects. A solution made of a pint of water to a spoonful of strong tobacco will be found an excellent remedy. The old plants, which after many seasons of blooming are likely to "run out" and become quite useless if not cared for early in the season, must be looked after also. The flowering begonia is a beautiful winter window dresser, and if put in boxes and carefully tended early in the fall will bloom all through the winter, and when arranged with geranium slips and ferns one can have an artistic garden the fall will bloom all through the winter, and when arranged with geranium slips and ferns one can have an artistic garden inside. There is no picture more cheering or homelike while the snow beats against the window pane than to see flowers smiling in a cozy room.

Physicians do not think that plants are healthful in sleeping apartments, but they do not object to them in other rooms. A great physician once said that a little flower blooming in winter seemed like a silent benediction on the household.
